Tibor Navracsics supports EURead:

Tibor Navracsics, European Commissioner for Education, Culture, Youth and Sport

"Culture and education are at the heart of the European project. They can boost development and mutual understanding by connecting people and generations, communities and countries. One important part of this process are the reading skills of every citizen in Europe. Therefore, investing in education and young people remains a priority. Solid literacy skills are key to ensure that we leave no one behind. Only 15 minutes of reading aloud or for pleasure every day make a huge difference. This is why I support the pan-European campaign Europe Reads, which aims at inspiring people to read. It can play an important role in fostering literacy across Europe – which is an essential part of building a cohesive, resilient society."

A sad story in Sweden?

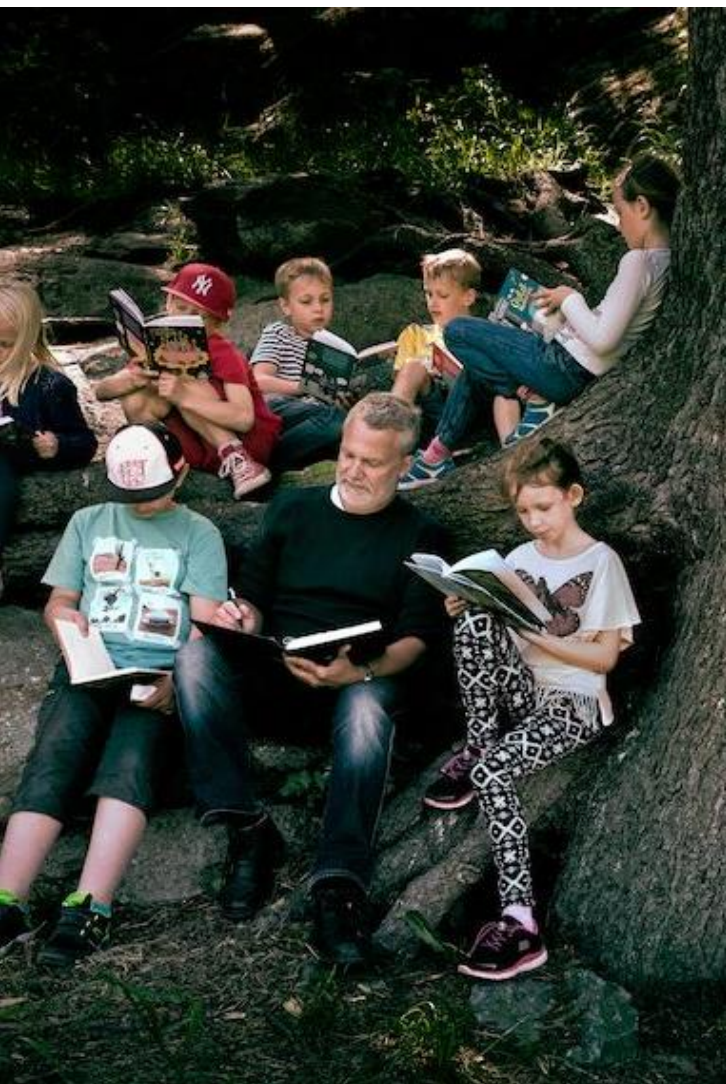

- The time for reading decreases
- Time for bedtime stories cut in half in ten years
- Boys' reading time cut in half in five years
- 1 of 5 boys don't understand the text in a daily newspaper
- 1 of 3 teachers under 40 years old read 2 books per year at the most

Why focus on reading?

- Democracy
- Understanding oneself and others
- Joy of reading
- Need to have future readers
